Task 1

The science of sleep

Paragraph one

We all go to sleep. As we sleep, our body and brain relax in a specific way. The body and brain go through several cycles when sleep. Each cycle may take a minimum of 90 minutes but no more than 110 minutes, and we go through 4 different stages during this cycle.

Paragraph two

A (Example). Your muscles and mind relax more and more. This is followed by the third stage which doesn't have any dreams. In the fourth stage of the cycle, when you have your deepest sleep, you start to have dreams. Then your brain becomes busy and this helps improve your memory.

Paragraph three

1. It can look at brain activity and scientists have discovered that in the first cycle of sleep, the deep sleep stage is only a few minutes. So dreams are brief and you might not remember them.

Paragraph four

2. . When you have had over 6 hours of sleep, you can sleep deeply and longer, up to 45-60 minutes. In the same way, dreams become longer and more memorable.

Paragraph five

3. However, how you wake up is just as important. If an alarm clock wakes you up, it may break your sleep cycle and you will still feel tired. It's much better to wake up naturally after a cycle. Fortunately, there are gadgets to help!

The London Underground

Paragraph A

The London Underground (the Tube) is the oldest underground transport system in the world. Recently, overcrowding (when there are too many people) has become a serious problem.

Paragraph B

The population of London has grown faster than the London Underground since it began in 1863, so overcrowding is not surprising. Stations get extremely busy. Sometimes, passengers cannot get on the first train that comes. When they do get on the train, it can be difficult to find a seat. Rush hour overcrowding has increased by 16% since 2005.

Paragraph C

However, the area the Tube covers has grown. It now has 404km of track in London and has 11 lines. Trains travel at an average speed of 33km/h carrying around 1.3 billion passengers to and from 270 stations each year.

Paragraph D

The government is trying to reduce overcrowding. Development at London Bridge station will mean that 1,750 passengers can travel on each train, 24 times an hour in both directions at the busiest times. In 2018, a new route called Crossrail will open.

Paragraph E

According to a recent survey, passengers welcome the improvements to the services. However, people also said that as London is a growing city, overcrowding is something everyone must accept.
