ASIAN YOUNG MUM: So well what happened, I went Bangladesh for a year and eight months cos of my father, um, so I missed year eleven, I come back and to them it's like my father, it's never enough, no matter how good you are it's like, you gotta do more, you gotta cover more wanted to go out - I couldn't, but because I wanted to - I'm so bad in his eyes.

Then well it was, I was on a day out, I was telling my parents I'm going work - (Laughs) and... got on the bus, met the father... on the bus... what a crazy meeting... and he was already drunk and we just got talking and we just clicked and to me that lifestyle it was just like - wow! You're drinking you're having fun - and I didn't have groups of friends that used to go out and drink cos I wasn't allowed out and the work lot is just - at work. So that was the first time I met someone, who's... you know doing their own thing, it was just like wow to me then he was like yeah, try a bit, tried it, loved the drink. (Laughs)

I never been West End until I met him, took me there and it was just a new life to me and it was like... woah... so, we just went out and just seen the lights and everything... (Laughs)

Yeah I was madly in love with him and to me it was, learning everything from him and having fun and I just wanted to be with him, I used to go and see him in prison um... obviously my parents didn't know anything about him in prison but...
