A Year in Twelve Keys, Diatonic Studies for Piano by Chris Caine

TCL 234402
ISBN 978-1-80490-754-2

This collection of Diatonic Piano Studies by Chris Caine blends compositional elegance with targeted technical challenges for intermediate to advanced pianists. With seven of the studies featuring in the Piano syllabus repertoire lists at Grade 5-8, this collection is perfect for exam preparation and performance alike.

Each of the studies is named after a month of the year and is set in one of the 12 keys, staying true to its diatonic roots (without chromatic notes or accidentals outside the key signature). These engaging pieces deepen pianists familiarity with each key while exploring diverse musical styles. Discover the Musical Theatre flair of 'January', the contemporary Classical charm of 'February', the French elegance of 'November', the pop-inspired 'August', and the intricate Fughetta of 'June'.

Perfect for pianists seeking to enrich their performance repertoire or prepare for Grade 5-8 exams, this collection offers an ideal blend of educational value and musical enjoyment.

Creative Composition for the Classroom

- ▶ A practical resource by pre-eminent Scottish composer James MacMillan and composer and educator Jennifer Martin
- ▶ Aimed at aspiring composers, those teaching creative music-making or composition, and instrumental teachers wanting to add more creativity to their tuition
- ▶ Great material for those choosing to present an 'own composition' in Trinity grade exams

James MacMillan and Jennifer Martin draw on their wealth of expertise, offering the reader a window into their techniques and demystifying the concept of musical creativity. They provide the keys to unlock students' imaginations, giving them the tools and confidence to develop their ideas and share them with friends, teachers and family.

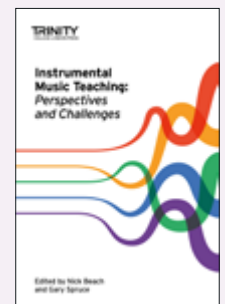

Critical thinking is encouraged through a range of individual and group activities, musical examples and analysis, with concise hints and tips, compositional techniques and suggestions for listening included along the way. The ideas presented can easily be adapted for a variety of learning situations with topics including pitch, rhythm, timbre, pulse, harmony, decision-making, instrumentation and structure. Graphic representations of musical structures teach young composers to visualise their work more holistically before embarking on their writing, while a printable worksheet, available to download, acts as a checklist for making compositional choices.

This volume combines technical rigour with imagination and creativity, allowing all educators and learners to expand the scope of their lessons, whether formally studying composition or simply wanting to add some creative music making to their curriculum.

NEW Instrumental Music Teaching: Perspectives and Challenges – June 2024

Instrumental music teaching and learning is a major part of music education in almost all cultures and traditions and many young people's lives are enriched by playing a musical instrument. How musical instruments are taught varies considerably across different musical traditions, and digital technologies and social media mean that young people now have much more choice about how they learn musical instruments.

Instrumental Teaching: Perspectives and Challenges has an international authorship. Its thirteen chapters explore major themes in instrumental music teaching including creativity, assessment, motivation, access and inclusion and the use of music technology. Other chapters examine recent research into instrumental teaching and learning, historical perspectives and the relationship between the teacher and musician identities.

This book is an important publication for all involved in music education, and in particular it provides an opportunity for those whose role includes teaching musical instruments to reflect on their practice. It will also be an invaluable resource for those engaged in research into instrumental teaching and learning as well as those supporting the professional development of instrumental music teachers.
