Paragraph two

C (Example). John Baird, one of Scotland's most significant engineers, helped to invent TV. He was born in 1888 before radio or television even existed. He was the first person to introduce moving pictures on TV to the world.

Paragraph three

He designed his first TV when he was in his thirties. The TV was very basic. He used boxes, biscuit tins, card and a motor from an electrical fan. His first TV picture was in black and white and it wasn't very clear.

Paragraph four

..... 2. Then he sent the first TV images under the sea, from Britain to America. Baird wanted to broadcast outside sports events on TV so in 1931, he made a TV camera for filming outside. He continued his work and much later on developed colour TV.

Paragraph five

Task 3

Electronic books

Paragraph A

An electronic book (also known as an e-book) is a book in electronic form that you read on computers, tablets or smartphones. An e-reader is small, electronic and designed just for reading e-books.

Paragraph B

In 1998 the first e-book readers started to appear. At first e-books were not popular and paper books remained the favourite reading choice. People expected e-books to go out of fashion and disappear.

Paragraph C

In 2004, electronic ink technology improved. The colour and brightness of e-reader screens also got better. E-books then became available for smartphones and other technology and all this meant e-book sales started to rise.

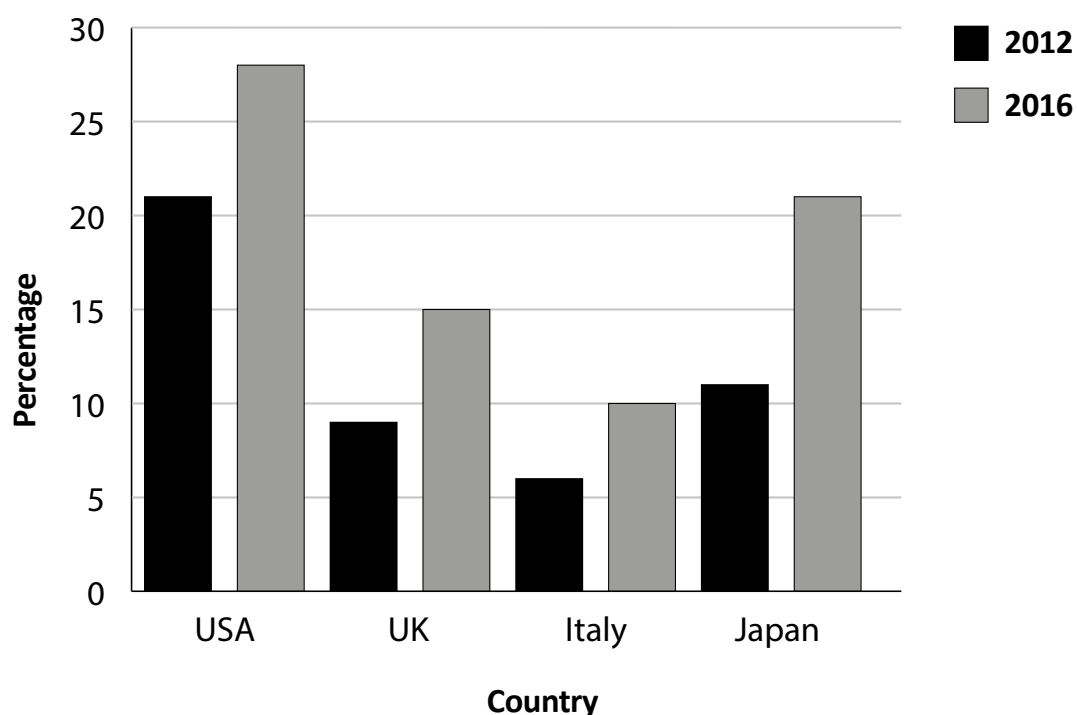

Paragraph D

However, some people still want to read paper books. They prefer the feel of them in their hand and they say they like to see books on a shelf. Others dislike looking at screens or don't want to use technology all the time.

Paragraph E

This has not prevented e-books from growing in popularity. A recent survey showed that 78% of people used e-books for research and 56% used them for study. Only 10% of people used them for leisure, so it seems paper books are still the most popular choice for free time reading.
